The Langley Centennial Museum, located in the historic village of Fort Langley, is owned and operated by the Township of Langley.

The museum opened in 1958. After more than 50 years of offering exhibits, programs, and other cultural and heritage services, we continue to grow and expand our role in the Township of Langley.

The museum is housed in the former Manager's home for Port Haney Brick & Tile. The museum features First Nations prehistory, history of settlement and prominent families of historic Maple Ridge and a world-class model railway diorama of the Port Haney area.

In 2008, the Nanaimo Museum was relocated into a purpose-built space as part of the Vancouver Island Conference Centre.

the New Westminster Museum and Archives is located within the Anvil Centre, which includes the New Media Gallery, conference space, theatres and studio space.

There are also two satellite museums.

The Exploration Place Museum + Science Centre is owned and operated by the Fraser-Fort George Museum Society, a non-profit society and registered charity. The Exploration Place was opened in 2001 with funding from the Regional District of Fraser-Fort George, The Government of Canada, Canfor Corporation, and The Government of British Columbia.

The Richmond art gallery is located within the Richmond Cultural Centre.
